5 STANDOUT TRAVEL ETIQUETTE LESSONS

From Lonely Planet

Travel in 2026 is about more than ticking destinations off a list, it's about travelling well. As recent headlines show, a lack of cultural awareness can turn a holiday into an international incident. From damaged artworks to disrespecting wildlife, poor etiquette has made tourists infamous for all the wrong reasons. Lonely Planet's upcoming release Don't Hike Naked in Switzerland: And 101 Other Travel Etiquette Tips offers a fantastically funny - and timely - reminder that understanding local customs isn't just polite, it's essential.

Here are five standout etiquette lessons from the book:

1. Public nudity isn't universally liberating

In Switzerland, hiking naked outside of designated naturist areas can result in a hefty fine. The law was introduced after an uproar in Appenzell, when a hiker wandered along a trail, past a Christian elderly care home, wearing just his boots and a backpack. However, cross the border into Germany, and there are no laws against getting your kit off anywhere - they even have two official naked hiking trails: one in the Harz Mountains and one in Lower Saxony.

2. Statues aren't lucky charms

Rubbing statues for good luck may seem harmless, but repeated touching causes damage. Authorities in Dublin recently placed a barricade on the street to stop people from touching the breasts of the city's Molly Malone statue; such behavior was inflicting several thousand Euro of damage every month.

Similar traditions include rubbing the crotch of Victor Noir's recumbent effigy in Paris to seek fertility; touching the breast of the Juliet statue in Verona, to bring luck in love; and touching the testicles of the Charging Bull in New York to bring good luck.

3. Gestures don't translate globally

Inadvertently using an inappropriate hand gesture while traveling is one of the easiest ways to cause unintended offense. Gestures that are completely innocuous at home can mean something entirely different when you're abroad.

Giving the thumbs up is the equivalent of flipping the bird in Iran, Greece, Russia, Sardinia and much of West Africa. While using the rock'n'roll gesture in Italy, Spain, Greece and Brazil, symbolises a bull's horns and implies a man's wife is cheating on him. The 'OK' signal (index finger touching thumb) is deemed obscene (denoting the anus) in Türkiye, Tunisia, Greece and Brazil.

4. Tipping isn't universal

While tipping is expected in the US, it can be confusing or even rude elsewhere. In many countries where tipping is not customary - such as Britain, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand/Aotearoa - leaving a little something for staff in restaurants is common practice. However, the situation is very different in parts of Asia. While tipping people in India, Sri Lanka, Thailand and across Southeast Asia is fine (many are poorly paid), trying to give staff money in Japan and Korea can bewilder and embarrass them, so don't do it.

5. Recline with consideration

Just because your seat can recline doesn't always mean it should. Reclining your seat to the full extent the minute the seat-belt light goes off, and staying stubbornly supine even when meals are being served, is a cardinal sin. Getting some shut-eye on a long-haul trip is more than reasonable, but you don't need to be horizontal for the entirety of the flight. A quick glance behind you or a polite warning before reclining shows basic courtesy in a very shared space. At 30,000 feet, a little awareness goes a long way.

ROUGH GUIDES' TOP TRAVEL TRENDS FOR 2026

The desire to travel shows no sign of slowing down, but how we want to travel is continually evolving. In 2026, the biggest emergent trends are rooted in the desire to escape from the noise of everyday life, crowds and algorithms, to have experiences that feel authentic to the individual. Rough Guides is well-known as a tried-and-trusted travel authority, telling it like it is about the most popular places to visit – and identifying the up-and-coming ones. Here, we take a look at the themes that we expect to influence travellers' decisions this year.

Destination swaps

With media coverage steadily increasing on the issue of overtourism – and a general sense that some places are just too busy – seeking a destination “dupe” is likely to be the hottest trend of the year, as travellers seek more value for money and a smaller visitor footprint. Mediterranean sea-and-sun-seekers could try Ksamil on the Albania Riviera or visit Ljubljana in Slovenia for an alternative city break.

Flight-free

Rail journeys and multi-stop trips are experiencing a renaissance of interest amongst people of all ages. The expansion of rail links between the UK and continental Europe will make it easier still to travel at high speed between destinations. As air travel feels ever more expensive and environmental concerns grow, slow travel continues to offer an immersive alternative. Try a direct train journey to Amsterdam from London, before travelling onwards around the Netherlands.

Solo travel

Setting off on independent travels has blossomed from a niche choice to a widely recognised – and crucially, enabled – block of the market in recent years. Powered by a growing number of people choosing to take sabbaticals or those seeking personal growth, travelling alone has become an aspirational goal for many – including digital nomads, individuals joining group trips, and those engaging in voluntourism. Taghazout in Morocco offers great coworking options with like-minded souls.

Neurodiverse travel

One of the most significant emergent sectors, neurodiverse tourism is increasingly visible, from greater access to quiet sensory facilities to opportunities to immerse in areas of keen interest. Recognition of particular destinations and types of experience as being rewarding for travellers with ADHD, for instance, is an empowering change. For an extraordinary variety of things to see and do, but also a clean and efficient environment, exploring Japan is a great option.

Off-the-beaten-track travel

Many travellers are in search of authenticity, something that can feel lost when a place becomes too well-known or the paths too well-trodden. As an added bonus, these places deliver a true break from regular life, allowing visitors to really switch off and immerse themselves in the destination. Calabria offers a sense of “Old World” Italy, away from mass tourism but rich in culinary traditions, nature adventure and hidden coves to explore.

Experiential long-haul

For travellers committing to long-haul trips, the key trend is for a specific “anchor” experience, whether that’s an event or a once-in-a-lifetime activity. People of all ages are willing to spend time and money flying a greater distance if the trip delivers a distinctive story and meaningful experiences, such as attending Carnival or an international cricket Test match in Trinidad and Tobago.

FROM DIPLOMACY TO DOLCE VITA

Q: You've represented Britain around the world, but you've also fallen for rural Italy. How do those two lives connect?

Having been posted to eight countries and regularly moved during my thirty-five years at the Foreign Office, taking on a new project renovating and developing an old farmhouse in the Maremma in Italy, in a way, seemed just like another move. Diplomatic life is about moving into a new property, settling in rapidly, and communicating with local people who have so much heritage and history. All of that was very beneficial to setting up in the Maremma.

Q: Italy has been part of your life for decades. Where did that begin?

It started when my family took in an Italian exchange student when I was twelve; he's still my closest Italian friend. Then my mother and father, through some insanity or trust, I'm not quite sure which, sent me off interailing around Europe after my O levels, and I ended up in Italy for the first time as part of that. I fell in love with the place, the language, the culture. Later, I studied Italian and focused particularly on Dante. Once you've read a bit of Dante, it gets into your DNA. Italy's really been a thread running through my life ever since.

Q: Why the Maremma region of Italy - a place many people don't know?

A friend from Florence told me, "Forget Chianti. The new Chianti is the Maremma." Within a month, through a series of chance encounters, I'd found the house 'I Cipressi' online, the first property I saw, and we went to see it. The first house we visited was the one we bought. It felt as though it was meant to be.

Q: What was the property like when you first saw it?

It had been largely neglected for half a century. The forest had taken over. The upstairs was functional enough to live in, but there was undergrowth right up to the walls. Yet both my wife and I could make that leap of vision, to strip it back and see the potential. And arriving via a cypress avenue made a huge impression. It really felt like Tuscany from all the films.

Q: Did you have any moments of doubt?

Definitely. We exchanged contracts on a cold, wet February day, and my parents had serious misgivings. Then a heatwave summer with our children in a very basic house, no pool and extreme heat. We did think, what have we done? How are we ever going to realise this vision?

Q: You even produce your own olive oil there? Can you describe that?

The romantic dream was trestle tables, big lunches and friends harvesting olives. The reality was very hard work and a tiny yield. I turned up at the cooperative with two tatty plastic bags full of olives. But freshly pressed olive oil is bright green, spicy, and tastes fantastic. When it's your own, it's even better.

Q: What reminds you you're deep in the countryside?

Wild boar. One evening we saw a mother with piglets waddling up the cypress drive, completely unbothered by us, as if we were the intruders. Another time, twenty-six boar ran across the road and into our property, all sizes, moving fast and surprisingly agile. You realise you're in their landscape as much as your own, and that the Maremma is still a genuinely wild place.

Q: Practical headaches?

Plumbing. The water pressure fluctuates and bursts pipes. After years of problems, we dug a well, ninety-seven metres down, and found fantastic fresh water. That felt like a victory.

Q: Final advice for would-be Italian homeowners?

Do research. Don't be taken in by one-euro houses, it's far more complicated. And find someone local and Italian to help you navigate the bureaucracy. But I wouldn't discourage anyone, it's all really worth it.

Maremma Mia

by ND Hopton

Chiselbury Publishing | PB | £11.99 | 9781917837156

Maremma Mia is a warm, witty chronicle of one family's adventure restoring an old farmhouse and olive grove in remote Tuscany. Set in the Maremma — “the new Chianti” — it unfolds through the seasons, capturing both the beauty and unpredictability of life abroad. From the medieval town of Suvereto to wild hills, fertile valleys and an Etruscan-haunted coastline, the book blends landscape, food, wine, flora and tradition with vivid portraits of local life. It also explores the region's remarkable past, from imperial intrigue to wartime resistance. Part travel memoir, part love letter, Maremma Mia celebrates the courage to turn a dream into reality.

Pathfinding

by Kerri Andrews

Elliott and Thompson | PB | £10.99 | 9781783968442

What if losing your way is how a new path begins? From the author of Wanderers: A History of Women Walking comes the story of one mother's journey from wilderness to freedom. After the upheaval of becoming a mother, walker Kerri Andrews finds herself carrying the idea that maybe the hills are no longer for her. Yet, as she begins to uncover hidden stories of other mothers who've walked, she realises that there may be a way back to adventure – and herself. So, Kerri begins small, with walks along beaches and in cities, joined by women whose lives have also been reshaped by motherhood.
